

KAISER PICTURE IN SHOP WINDOW SMASHED BY MAN

It is not healthy to exhibit a picture of the Kaiser in Montreal these days.

Louis Wainfater, Sons & Co., learned this, when a citizen strode into their shop this afternoon and walked on a portrait of the German Emperor, which had been smiling complacently through the glass.

The Wainfater picture shop and framing establishment is at 58 St. Lawrence boulevard. A man passing, caught sight of a moustachio, that looked suspiciously like that of Wilhelm No. 2. He was annoyed, but he was certain in movement, leaving nothing to chance. Going in, he asked if the face in the frame represented the King of Prussia. He was told, "Yes." Then he, speaking in turn, said: "I am going to smash it."

And he did. The glass between did not interfere with his procedure, being quite easily overcome. Once captured, the offending resemblance was trodden under foot while a fast growing crowd outside throated approval.

Then the patriot went home.
