

VERY EMINENT SPIES.

Fort Henry is occupied by a number of Germans who are suspects. They are not at all troublesome, and certainly some of them do not appear to be dangerous men. They are well fed, have comfortable quarters and beds, and will not suffer no matter how long the war lasts. Their arrest shows how leartul our government is of even suspects.

Mr. Wile, of the London Mail, has shown that Britain is not so suspicious as it ought to be, under some circumstances. Last June it entertained one of the Krupps, and his technical experts, and showed them through the gun factories. This was on the eve of a great war. The Krupp referred to is not a traveller for his gun factory. He has no need to canvass or boost it when so many of and the partners of his business. In and the boosters of his business. In this case he nosed into everything, and no one knows what use he is making of his information.

The experience will not be lost. Britain will realize that among the many who are in the service of the German government, as spies, there may be some very distinguished men, and that they will not hesitate to misuse their social positions in order to forward their political ends. It may be that our war lords will not again relax their vigilance over state secrets to the advantage of an enemy.
