

The Ottawa Journal, sensational to an unusual degree of late, published on Tuesday from a staff correspondent a story of conditions at the Petawawa detention camp that is highly amusing. "One of the biggest novelties that Canada has ever had inside its borders," and "one continued kaleidoscope of novelties changing in quick succession," are some of the phrases of this-supposedly clever word artist, while we are told that "it takes the largest guard ever mounted in the British Empire to watch the men," and other equally foolish twaddle. Most of the stuff written is pure bancombe and while it may be accepted by some credulous Ottawa people the only conclusion people up this way can come to after reading the article is that the Journal's "yellow" streak is developing rapidly.
