

TAKE 2 GERMANS OFF U.S. VESSEL

Canadian Authorities Intern Aliens Employed On American Tug

ST. JOHN, N.B., Jan. 27—Herman Fulkandort and William Warran, two Germans who were employed as stewards on the American ocean-going tug Ramos, formerly the Tabasco, of New York, were taken from St. John yesterday to be interned at Amherst, N.S.

When it was learned that the men were Germans they were arrested. The tug captain objected immediately, claiming that his vessel was American and the men could not be taken off. It was shown that the Ramos had sailed from Fernandina to Portland, Maine, with barges of hard pine and at Portland had picked up another barge for St. John. From here she was to go to Spencer's Island, N.S., so as she had entered at one Canadian port and cleared for another, it was held the men could be taken.

Fulkandort said he was glad to be arrested, and would much sooner remain in prison in Canada until after the war than return to Germany. He said he came from a village in Saxony, and his father and three brothers had already been killed. Out of the population of his village every man between 18 and 45 years of age had been at the front, and he himself had been called for.

Warran had little to say except to assert doggedly that he felt sure Germany would win. Nothing was found on the men.
