Great consternation was caused all over the city when it was learned that three prisoners had escaped from the fort internment camp. There was much street talk on the matter and the general consensus of opinion is that it is a very mysterious thing how the men managed to make their get-away. The Whig was in conversation with one of the 14th Guard and he stated that the men had been behaving themselves very well of late, and it is thought that some liberty might be given them.
