

THOUGHT HUNS WERE ATTACKING KINGSTON

Police Had Busy Time Informing Citizens About the "Night Attack."

Another "night attack" was pulled off by the soldiers at Barriefield Camp during Wednesday night, and as a result a large number of citizens who were not aware of what was going on were very uneasy about the matter, and had an idea that the Huns had at last made an attack on Kingston.

All through the night the telephone at the police station was kept quite busy, as a result of people wanting to know what was doing.

"I thought sure the Germans had made an attack," said one citizen, when informed of the cause of all the noise. He was much relieved when told that such was not the case.