

Quiet in North Winnipeg.

All of the excitement was downtown, there being a funereal stillness markedly noticeable in North Winnipeg and other outlying sections. The foreigners in the city, many of whom belong to nations now enemies of Great Britain, showed good common sense in keeping well out of sight. So far as is known they refrained entirely from any tactless demonstrations. Not an Austrian showed up around the consulate. The few Germans who were seen at the German consulate were very anxious to let it be known that they were from the States and were up here entirely for the purpose of buying land. They refused absolutely to talk further.
