

Attempt On Wireless At Port Arthur

An almost successful attempt to put the wireless station at Port Arthur out of business was made last night, but today the station is in working order again. The grappling cables were all cut, and the aerial wires brought to the ground. When the officer in charge started after the attackers, and was shot at, but fortunately the shot missed him. Today a military guard is being put at the station. This is the second attempt that has been made to wreck the wireless at Port Arthur, the first one being unsuccessful.
