

Bulgarians Here Now Very Scarce

*Of Two Thousand Said to be in
City Once, Few Are Here
Now*

Toronto's Bulgarian colony seems to have dissolved into thin air with the closing alliance of that country to Germany. Recently estimated at 2,000 by Mr. Stefan Ponateroff, envoy extraordinary to America, the local Bulgarian population is now almost impossible to find.

They may have gone to the bush or construction camps. They may have gone to the United States, because of the bad times and they may have gone secretly to swell the ranks of the enemies of Britain. No one knows.

A few who remain and who have homes and families here, show no consuming desire to see their all to assist Germany. They ask why they should exchange their property and homes for desolate fields and starvation.
