

Germans Had Walking Race

A walking race for a watch as a prize was what occupied the time of the German prisoners of war at Fort Henry on Sunday morning. At six o'clock every German in the camp started on a walk around the lower court with the object of keeping it up until noon. Around and around the yard the prisoners walked, as one fellow expressed it, "wearing out good Government shoes"—but gradually the line thinned out. At eleven o'clock only six were in the line and only two finished. The winner was presented with a good silver watch.
