

DID NOT SPEAK AGAINST THE ALLIES.

Nicol Mozzolon was asked his nationality. "Italian," he stated.

"They say you were speaking against the Allies?" said the Magistrate.

"No—not me. I justa drinka glass of the beer and maybe some another whiskey." He promised to be careful in future and was allowed to depart.

"What nationality are you?" Mathew Point was asked. "I'm a Swede-Finlander," said Point.

"And what are you?" Edward Walker was asked. "I'm a Toronto Canadian?" said Walker. A police constable stated that fighting had taken place.

"No, no," interrupted Point, "he want me to go one way, I want him to go not that way. We just catch home." Point caught hold of Walker showing just how it happened. They hurried out of court together.

Next Tuesday Archibald McGruggen will hear more. It was said he approach ladies on Yonge street and spoke to them. "Better sober up," he was told.

It was a badly battered man that answered to the name of John Phaney. "I guess you want a regular clean up," he was told.

"No, sir, I can change my shirt at home."

"Well, all the same it will be a week," was the decision.
