

Praises Army But Name Is Herman, So He's Mobbed

Herman Schlossberger talked of war in a downtown hotel. He praised the deeds of valor the battlefield was noted for. Suddenly somebody asked him his name. It took two burly policemen to separate him from the crowd.

He was charged Friday at the police court with being an unregistered alien. He was asked why he talked of war in an enemy country.

"Because," said Herman, "I go to join the Canadian army." Investigation showed that he had been living in Canada for seven years and was duly naturalized.

He was allowed to go free in order that he might join a local unit.
