

GERMAN COUNT VON SUDOW

PATIENT IN GENERAL HOSPITAL
WITH CHOLICISSIS OF LIVER.

Not Expected to Recover From His Disease—Feels His Humiliating
Position Keenly.

Count von Sudow, one of the alien enemies of Fort Henry Internment Camp, is in the General Hospital in a weak condition and is not expected to recover from his illness. The count was one of the first Germans of Canada to be arrested and interned when the war broke out. He feels his position keenly and though an enemy much sympathy is felt for his particular case.

He was a resident engineer on construction work for the C.P.R. when the war broke out being in the staff of C. W. P. Ramsay, Chief Engineer for Eastern Construction, but now overseas as brigadier of a Railway Construction brigade. The count did not use his title, however, but as a highly competent engineer was highly esteemed by the high officials of the C.P.R. and had a personal acquaintance with late Charles M. Hays, vice-president.

When the war broke out the count was one of many aliens who made the mistake of trying to get out of the country. He went off not because of the war, but on a personal matter. After his capture he was brought to Fort Henry along with other men including Mundheim who was general manager of the Canada Cement Products of Quebec.

Since coming to the fort he has been stricken with cholericissis of the liver and his treatment on the doctor's orders of a quart of ale a day aroused public interest and was the cause of a story being circulated that booze was being taken into the fort for the prisoners.

Citizens who have become acquainted with the patient claim that he is well educated and very likable and one who feels very much his humiliating position.
