

German Officer Told to Leave Club

Canadian Agent of Krupp's Not Welcome at Club Canadien

Baron von Polenka, an officer of the Kaiser's army and an agent for the house of Krupp was ordered from the premises of the club Canadien, LaGauchetiere street, in Montreal.

The Baron, who is a member of the club, dropped in for a social evening. His reception was somewhat lacking of warmth, and suddenly one of the members stood up and said:

"Didn't you tell me when you came to Canada two years ago, that you were an army officer and an agent for Krupp's?"

"I did," replied the Teuton calmly.

"Then why didn't you go back and fight?" asked the member.

"I should very much like to, but the authorities won't let me."

"Get out of here, you're a spy," cried one of those present, and the Baron retreated hastily.

Von Pollenks has been before the military authorities here, but there has been nothing in his actions to excite suspicion against him, so he still enjoys his liberty.
