

CHAPLAIN SACRIFICED LIFE TO HELP SICK MEN

Captain G. S. Ingles Caught Fatal Disease While Read- ing to Patients.

Richard Ulrich, confectioner, of Mount Dennis, who was interned in Stanley Barracks on the order of John Bayliss, J.P., is still a prisoner of war, and it appears that his release can only be obtained through the authorities at Ottawa. It is declared that the justice of the peace had no authority to order his detention, as rural cases come under the jurisdiction of the Provincial police.

Major A. Gillies, D.S.O. of the 12th York Rangers, who went to Salisbury with the Fourth Battalion, is likely to become attached to the third contingent. He has reported to military headquarters and is awaiting orders. Major Gillies said that he believed the Canadians would continue in France, and would not go to the firing line until meningitis had been entirely stamped out.

The death of Capt. Geo. S. Ingles, chaplain of the Queen's Own first contingent detachment, reported recently, was a death of self-sacrifice, according to Major Gillies. Capt. Ingles had been in the habit of reading by the hour to men of the regiment who were suffering from meningitis. The chaplain caught the disease from his association with the patients.

The military authorities have received no instructions in regard to where the third contingent will mobilize. It is believed that they will go into the Exhibition grounds after the second contingent has left until the warm weather comes, when they will likely be moved to some place in the open. Niagara camp is not favored by officers, who declare that there is not room enough there to accommodate more than 4,000 men. Petawawa, they say, would be a much more suitable location. Valcartier, of course, will again be available when the warmer weather comes.
