

PORT WELLER STORY OF AUSTRIAN CRUELTY

The Lincoln county authorities are reporting a case of deep-dyed villainy at Port Weller which might in happier days have resulted in international complications. Seeing the two nations are at war with each other it doesn't matter. The whole trouble is over a goat. The goat has gone to the happy hunting grounds, provided there is such a place for goats. The goat was owned by an Englishman. A band of Austrians resident in Port Weller coveted it, and as all's fair in love and war, they decided to have it, by hook or crook. What they wanted with it particularly no one seems to know. At any rate the goat disappeared from its accustomed abiding place Monday night and was found next morning lying near a house occupied by about 25 Austrians. It had blood on its mouth and it was dead. The Austrians will be questioned as to their knowledge of how the goat came to its untimely death.
