

HE WOULD NOT REGISTER

At a Kingston Hotel Advertising a German Hostelry.

When J. Clarke, inspector for the Board of Railway Commissioners of Canada, entered a Kingston hotel on Tuesday night to register, he suddenly dropped the pen and remarked that he would not sign his name on an hotel register that contained on its date lines the words: "Stop at Kaiserhof Hotel, Chicago."

"I wouldn't sign my name to that page," he said to the clerk, who asked for a reason. "That hotel you are advertising on your register is a big German house in Chicago, and the kaiser of Germany is interested in it. I'm surprised that you would allow such an inscription on your book, and I'm surprised that officers of the Canadian force here would stand for it."

The proprietor, learning of the incident, declared that he had not noticed the advertisement, and assured Mr. Clarke that no more of the date labels would be used.
