

NO LOVE FOR KALTSCHMIDT

Dynamiters Respa and Lefler Hope That He Will be Caught

WERE IN TORONTO GOING TO KINGSTON

"I only hope that Kaltschmidt will be caught and made to suffer as we are suffering," bitterly remarked William Lefler, the dynamiter, to a reporter of The Daily News at Court street, police station this morning, Lefler, who was sentenced to ten years, was handcuffed to Charles Respa, his fellow conspirator, who was sentenced to life imprisonment for the dynamiting at Walkerville and Windsor.

"Is that your wish too?" Respa was asked, and the dynamiter nodded assent.

The two prisoners arrived in Toronto last night from Windsor in the custody of Provincial Inspectors Boys and Miller and Provincial Constable J. H. Smith, of Walkerville, and were lodged overnight in the Court street cells.

Satisfied With Trial.

As they were being removed from the cell, to be taken into the taxicab, which was to transport them to the station, they talked to The Daily News. Lefler, who is nearly six feet tall, was neatly dressed in a dark suit, overcoat and Christie hat, and appeared unconcerned. In striking comparison was the attitude and appearance of Respa. Small, not being more than about five feet, six inches in height, he looked a pigmy ranged alongside his accomplice. Respa was dressed in a dark grey suit, sweater coat, cap, and had no overcoat. His eyes were red as if he had spent a sleepless night, while he looked very downcast.

"Are you satisfied with the trial," Respa was asked.

He shrugged his shoulders and vouchsafed no reply. Lefler, however, intervened and said: "I am thoroughly satisfied with the trial. It was absolutely fair and I have no complaint to make."

Whereupon Respa remarked: "I am in a strange country, so I have to be satisfied."

Queried regarding Kaltschmidt, the prisoners gave vent to their feelings, hoping that he would be caught and made to suffer as they were suffering.

Curious Crowd Collected.

The "bracelets" were slipped on the men's wrists and manacled together they were escorted out to the waiting taxicab at 8.35 a.m. On the steps of the police station the men halted for a moment. Lefler drew in a long breath of air, while Respa gulped, and the officers hurried them past the small knot of curious people that had gathered outside the police station, and into the taxicab.

Arrived at Union Station the two prisoners were hurriedly taken down to the waiting train for Kingston, a large group of people following in their wake. The officers in charge of the men have experienced no trouble whatever with their charges.
