

THINK MAN HELD IS GERMAN SPY

Arrested on Mountain With Map Marking Armories and Munition Plants

LONG UNDER OBSERVATION

Gave Luxembourg as His Home —Was Surprised in Darkness Near Top of Incline Railway

That they have succeeded in capturing a dangerous German spy, who was arrested on the Mountain early Saturday morning, is the opinion of the local police. He was taken into custody by Sergeant Dettmers, accompanied by Constables Bastien and Dufour, of the St. Lawrence street station, who took him to police headquarters.

When he was questioned by Chief Campeau at headquarters, the alleged spy said that his name was Jean Bouchard. He stated that his home was in Luxembourg, but that he had been residing here for about twelve months. Although he was poorly dressed, a search revealed a considerable sum of money in his possession. Amongst other papers found in his pockets was a small map of the city, on which the locations of the different armories, the railway stations, public buildings, pumping stations and reservoirs, as well as some of the largest establishments where war munitions for the allied armies are being manufactured, were carefully noted. He also had a notebook that was well filled with copious notes in German, as well as copies of a German newspaper published in New York, and a couple of local newspapers.

LIVING ON THE MOUNTAIN.

That he did not need to live on the Mountain, where he admitted to Chief Campeau that he had been living for some weeks, was evidenced by the fact that he had in his possession $276.73, mostly in Canadian money, but some in gold coins of Germany. When he would not give any satisfactory account of himself, the head of the police force ordered the man to be turned over to the military authorities, with everything that was found in his possession.

While it is known that the man has been around the Mountain for a few weeks, it is not believed that he has been here all the time. It is thought that he has frequently made trips between this city and some point in the United States. Two baggage checks of the Grand Trunk Railway, one for a valise and the other for a trunk, were found on him and turned over with his other belongings to the military authorities. When these have been located, it is believed that further evidence against the alleged spy will have been secured and it may be possible to connect him with some organization outside of this country.

Sergeant Dettmers said that he first noticed the man a couple of weeks ago on the Mountain, but, when he spoke to him, the stranger made a sign that he did not understand French nor English. Thinking that he was some foreigner out of work, and as there was nothing about his appearance different from hundreds of others who frequent the Mountain every day during the summer, the officer did not pay much attention to the man.

TAKEN NEAR INCLINE.

It was learned last week that a man was seen going towards the summit of the Mountain every night, so Sergeant Dettmers, with Constables Dufour and Bastien, decided to keep a lookout for him. They located the man Dettmers had spoken to a couple of weeks ago, as he came out of a clump of underbrush north of the Incline Railway Station, on the top of the Mountain, early Saturday morning. The first time that Dettmers spoke to the man, two weeks ago, the suspect said that he did not understand French nor English. But it was discovered when he was taken into custody Saturday morning that he understood and spoke both languages perfectly.

That there may be some connection between the alleged spy, who said he was thirty-one years of age, and is apparently well educated, and the airship that has been seen in the vicinity of the Mountain, the police are inclined to believe. While no instruments of any kind by which signals might be made to an airship were found on the man, it is thought that they might be hidden somewhere on the mountain and a careful search will be made in the locality known to have been frequented by him, with a view to locating such, should they be hidden anywhere on the Mountain.

Bouchard, which the police do not believe is the man's name, protested strongly in French and English against being arrested, claiming that he had done nothing wrong. He was told by Sergeant Dettmers that, because he would not state where he resided or give a satisfactory account of himself, he would be held on a charge of vagrancy. But when he was taken to police headquarters, and documents were found in his possession, it was decided to turn him over to the military authorities right away without waiting to send him before the court on the vagrancy charge.
