

Newly Arrived German Says People Believe Kaiser is Mad

The common belief in Germany among the people is that the Kaiser is gone mad, and fancies that he can rule the whole world. But I would not be surprised to hear at any moment of a great revolution among the German people that will open the eyes of the Kaiser."

They were two German ex-army men just arrived from across the water, and were seen at the union depot yesterday afternoon. They were on their way west, one to Regina, and one to Edson, Alberta. When they were asked what they thought about the war, one of them answered in the words given above. The immigrant went on to tell of the way the taxes for the upkeep of the army had been continually increased, and the one levied at the last meeting of the Reichstag had not been collected yet, as the people had not the money to meet it.

Coming straight from Germany, the speaker declared that there would be no enthusiasm among the people for the present war. The common people had been ground down for years with the extent of the military burden, and they would very soon revolt. "The people are about tired of the army and navy, and their patience will not stand much more," was the parting word of one of the Germans.
