

Markesfeldt Girl Works in Laundry

*Is at Women's Jail, the Mercer
Being Filled up at Present*

Louisa Markesfeldt, the "German Spy," who a few weeks ago was the most talked of girl in Ontario, is now a diligent worker in the laundry at the Women's Jail, east of the Don River. She was sentenced to "six months and indefinitely" in the Mercer Reformatory by Magistrate Kingsford a week ago, but was not removed to the institution on King street west, as the place is filled to capacity. It was intended to hold her at the Women's Jail until a vacancy arose at the Mercer, but it is now rumored that the girl will, instead, be removed to the Home of the Good Shepherd, on O'Hara avenue.

Her conduct at the Jail so far has been exemplary. She performs her tasks in a manner to call forth the praise of those in charge. If she still possesses pro-German tendencies she is wise enough to keep them to herself and thus escapes a lot of inconvenience which might have been caused her by fellow-prisoners. Mrs. Sinclair, matron of the Women's Jail, told The Daily News that the girl is a model prisoner. She eats and sleeps well, performs her duties satisfactorily and appears to have lost all inclination to recount those weird stories which she told to the local police and which caused such a profound sensation at the time.
