Bringing his brother to take his place in the 99th battalion, Private J. W. Ham transferred from the guard regiment to the 79th to go overseas.

W. S. Strathers, a farmer who had enlisted in the 99th, leaving his eldest son to run the farm, began to fear that the place would not be properly worked and so changed places with the young man going back to the land, while the boy came to the city to guard prisoners. The other sons have enlisted for overseas service.
