There are about 1,700 names on the registry book at the police court, the majority of them being Austrians. There are, in addition to this, a number of Germans, Bulgarians and Turks. The registry of these people commenced at the beginning of the war, and has been added to ever since. They have to report every Saturday, and some hundreds of names are recorded every week. The majority of these men drift around from place to place and have to report when they arrive in the city and when they leave.
