

"HOW DRY I AM" SANG GERMANS IN CELLS

Two Young Men Arrested a Week-Ago Are Still in Custody.

What will be done with the two young Germans arrested a week ago, and who have been held in the police cells?

The young prisoners, who are alleged to have assisted in the recent escape of two Germans from Fort Henry, are still confined in the police cells, and their case is still under investigation by the military authorities.

The men have exhausted all their means, and what they have had to eat the past few days has been given to them at the expense of the city. They are getting tired of life in the police station, but the police have had no instructions as to what is to be done with them.

The Germans evidently miss their beer, as on Tuesday forenoon they could be heard singing that favorite song so well known to tipplers entitled, "How Dry I Am." They don't know that Kingston has gone "dry," so if by any chance they should gain their liberty there is some surprise in store for them.
